

CLEP EXAMS for NYS Certification
for missing Math and Science classes

Title of the Math and Science test, I'm taking for college credits towards certification:

- College Mathematic
- Natural Science

These are the tests I'm taking. Be sure to check with Albany for the ones you need.

Hey fellow Teachers

My name is Michael. I want you all to know some information about my journey in becoming a teacher or, should I say, trying to become a teacher. In May of 2020 I graduated with my Masters in Education. However, after graduating, and passing all my state exams, I am frustrated to find out my certification application for my Initial Teaching License is on hold because I'm missing credits in Science and Math. The college I attended transferred all my credits to my Masters Degree requirements, but this college told me these classes would count towards my certification. This was not true.

Just imagine, having passed all your state exams, graduating with your Masters, but still being told, you need college credits to receive your Initial Certification! After calling my college and being told to take two $1,500 individual classes, I found myself lost and confused about what to do after graduate school.

How can I earn six credits without spending so much money? All I wanted to do was teach at this point. I should be interviewing right now, not still trying to figure out what I need. I was directed to the CLEP exams. The CLEP exam is state accepted and much less expensive way to cover missing college credits. The CLEP exam is only $89. Or you can pay $121 to take remotely from your home computer. I wish I had been given this information last year. I hope this information is helpful.

-Michael
